Dear Sir:-

We understand that you need more incandescent electric lights in the mint and are now putting in new engines for power purposes which would give you an ample surplus of power for this purpose. Your present consumption of gas is so large that we are confident a very decided saving in expense could be obtained by a more general use of the electric lights.

Will you kindly advise us what the prospects are, in your opinion, for an increase of our plant in the mint, and very greatly oblige us.

The writer will be pleased to go over the building at any time and locate the necessary lights if you so desire and also give you a close idea of the probable expense.

We remain,

Yours very truly,
